WEDNESDAY SVENING, SEPT. 7

[COMMUNICATED. Skeleton in Luray Cave. How came you here, and who you were, The wander chine us all; What anguish here you had to bear,

And none to hear you call. Perhaps with feverish, aching train . You wander d through this cave, Departed spirits to your train

To show you to your grave. How many days of this sad lot. Where no wind of Heaven blows To friends on earth long forgot,

God alone new knows. While standing by those bleaching bones, floorusted in the rocks.

My spirit within me mesos And death my pleasure mocks. blany view those sad remains

From far distant lands, And their memory e'er retains "We die as Fate commands." Farewell, now, raysterious friend, We seek earth's light again,

Which to you can a'er extend. So long to darkness late. Now, when I see by day's bright light A green and flowery grave I'll ever think of that sad sight-

The mystery of the Cave. HICKORY GROVE.

[COMMUNICATED.

The Stars and the Bouth Wind. The sun set fades like a cameless thing. Like a dying bird with a broken wing ! The stars come out from the vault above, Like glittering geme on a violet pall-Like memories sweet of a dear dead love,

They sparkle and shine-and that is all. My memory drifts to the dear dead past, And I muse on hopes too bright to last. Oh! golden stars so far away,

Do you sing of the hopes beyond reall. Dear fittering game, will it never be day? Buy the stars shope on-and that was all. The south wind came with a sigh-and calm Like a pilgrim bearing a holy palm.

I yearned, and I asked the south wind then To give me some hope that might enthrall; II had been both true to women and men, | But the south wied sighed -and that was all. I fought for a place in the world's great throng;

I struggled for right, igoored the wrong-Oh weary world how cold you are To a fond heart filled with woe and gall; You smiled and you cursed, and you gave me

You filled me with sorrow-and that was all.
